Contributions:

During my PhD Study:

A new PWM switching strategy has been developed for full-bridge inverter which produces the lower total harmonic distortion and higher voltage magnitude. Also, a new adaptive structure using resonator filter-bank and frequency demodulation techniques has been proposed for online harmonic estimation and reduction in active power filters. The proposed control strategy along with partial harmonic reduction schemes reduces the power rating required for active power filter while fulfilling the harmonic standard requirements.

During my Master Study:

A new structure for neural network-based short -term load forecasting is proposed which reduces the design complexity of the two stages, clustering and fore casting, neural network structures to a single stage. Further, it provides more accurate forecasting when compared with conventional methods.
